Adler University Master's in Counseling: Rehabilitation Program (MACR) Program Outcomes

The Rehabilitation Counseling program at Adler University is a fully accredited rehabilitation counseling program, accredited by the Council on Rehabilitation Education (CORE) through 2016. The MACR program, a full-time program comprised of 64 credit hours, has a goal of admitting 15 students in each graduate cohort. The full-time program admits students each year in the fall. Student outcomes are evaluated annually on a variety of different metrics that are part of the overall program evaluation.

Currently, the MACR graduate program has 18 students enrolled. The program has two full-time faculty and two part-time adjunct faculty who teach the specific MACR classes. Additionally, students are taught by multiple Counselor Education and Counseling Department full-time and adjunct faculty in courses that are required across all Counseling specializations.

The instructor to student ratio is 1:9.

For the 2013-2014 academic year, a total of 10 students graduated from the program; these graduates are employed or are pursuing doctoral degrees. Twenty percent of MACR students are from underrepresented groups, including persons with disabilities.

The Illinois Department of Financial and Professional Regulation accepts the CRC exam as the content examination in order for students to become licensed as Professional Counselors. Our students have achieved an impressive 95% passing rate on the Certified Rehabilitation Counselor examination to date. Adler University continues to encourage students to pursue certification and licensure upon graduation.
